PETTY ILLS DROP AWAY IN OUR TRAMPS A-FIELD

Those of Us Who Can Skip to the Woods in the Springtime Will Receive a Great Reward.

By FRANCES SHAFFER.

By FRANCES SHAFFER.

Last season, while the winds and the snow were blusteringly trying to procisim that their long, majestic reign was unbroken, a woman jubliantly fared forth with a illting spring some that their long, majestic reign was unbroken, a woman jubliantly fared forth with a illting spring some and a practical listener, looking at the skies overhead and the white mantic underneath, called it untimely and told her she better select another subject for a song, because the wintry blasts and the flirting snowdlakes were mighty poor accompanists.

But the singer said then, and heaving the song some show it is true that in the flirting snowdlakes were mighty poor accompanists.

Some of us, when we were quite the first show the singer said then, and heaving the some sold step to their winter homes a day or said the song of the nature-world sweetly far though they sometimes bld farwell to their winter homes a day or said they need to say that we loved best the winteg season; that the winds says it now, who cares? Not the birds, for though they sometimes bld farwell to their winter homes a day or their soft, warm feathers, and their sate, you haven't long to stay? And not the brave buds and leaves, tolded tight and firm away from the chill for they knowning which the song seem to say; I for they knowning were to see the solded tight and firm away from the chill for they knowning were to see the solded tight and from a wear to see the solded tight and from a wear to say the solded tight and from a wear to say the solded tight and from a wear to say the solded tight and from a wear to say the solded tight and from a wear to say the solded tight and from a wear to say the solded tight and from a wear to say the solded tight and from a wear to say the solded tight and from a song to keep pace with the first of the solded tight of the solded tight of the sold tight of the sold tight of the sold tight of the

And as for us, we say: Quite likely old winter has a little strength left, but never mind; every blow and bluff of the nature of the old March wind brings us near-r and nearer to the time "when the green, you know, gits back in the trees." And we are waiting, with all the impattence of the child fi our hearts, for the dark, winter coverleta to unfold and the soft, tender greens to peep through.

This design is graceful and easily managed by wearse and laundrees. The material is one of the new cotton weaves with a rough surface, white and colored being used as shown in the sketch.
The striped pieces are of linen, with the colored stripe matching the colored actings. White pearl buttons and an enameled leather belt are used.

We have already heard the robin's prophecy, and every time we hear it sounds a little sweeter than the last day the resh miracles of birds and grace, we are glid and the soft heard with the same to the resh miracles of birds and grace, we are glid and to me retty soon. And were seed that the child in our lower may know up.

It seems a long, tong while ago since we took a last look at the little ground space about our homes, when everything that had life in it was sober-coated and threadige in it was sober-coated and threadige in it was sober-coated and threadige. And now, though to entward appearance things are pretty much the same, the discreted wisful air is goine, for the warm Mother Nature is astiff and soon will be awake. And happy everybody who is wise enough to listen and to watch. For very soon there will be a new soing in the air at every turn; that is, for those who have the disconding and city sights behind them for a few days or a few shous or a fe Little Sausages and Apple.

It is not too late to serve the timy little pork sausages with apples. Fare and cut the apples in halves, removing the cores; cook them tender and clear in sugar sirup. Lay half an apple at each end of a little oblong platter with two of the little assusages in the middle and sprig af paraley and tiny red radish at the side. Serve the apple sirup in a little glass pitcher or dish, either pouring it over the sausage or eating it with your toast of muffle.

or eating it with your toast of mufin.

Ham and Macaroni Croquettes.

Break up half a pound of macaroni in quarter-inch pieces and boil in plenty of salted water for fifteen minutes. Drain and put hack into the saucepan with a little grated or chipped cream cheese, sait and cayenne and half a cup of cream or rich milk. Let it get perfectly cold and mold into small cylinder-shaped croquettes.
